"The Dark and Bloody Ground."

To the VETERANS,

Their Families and Friends.

September, 1895.

On Muldraugh's Heights in Hardin County, twenty miles from Louisville, Ky., at the confluence of the Ohio and Salt Rivers, on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern R. R. is a romantic spot memorable to the Veterans of the Ninth Regiment Michigan, First Regiment Wisconsin, and the Sixteenth and Twenty-eighth Regiments Kentucky, United States Volunteers.

Here is old Muldraugh's Fort which has been carefully preserved so that the old earthworks and entrenchments are intact just as they were left thirty years ago at the close of the war.

On this superb hill, over-looking the pretty, old town of West Point, nestling at its base, and commanding a view of the mighty Ohio, which grandly sweeps and bends many miles in view to the east and west, flanked on either side by the rich and fertile valley, and extending far away towards the north and east the undulating hills of Indiana. Two states and seven counties are visible, all forming a scene on which the delighted eye loves to linger.

Here entrenched behind earthworks thrown up towards the south, the gallant boys in blue guarded the passes of the Muldraugh range protecting the Ohio River from the invasion of the enemy from the south, and guarding the turn-pike toward Bowling Green and Nashville, and the pontoon bridge at Salt River. Here they sat by the camp fires many a long night, singing the inspiring tunes of "Old Columbia," talking of dear ones at home in Old Michigan; here they slept and dreamt of wives and children and faithful sweethearts, and the happy re-union with them "when this cruel war was over;" here they awoke to the tattoo of the drum and answered roll calls; here they watched and prayed by those who fell victims to the enemy, disease and other sad misfortunes of war, and here at last they laid them away in that peace which the world cannot give, under the trees in the old soldiers' burying ground, which may still be pointed out.

"The muffled drum's sad roll has beat the soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade shall meet the brave and daring few;
On fame's eternal camping ground their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn sound the bivouac of the dead."

To this beautiful spot you are cordially invited, together with your friends who may accompany you, to the G. A. R. Encampment, at Louisville, September, 1895, with the assurance on our part that everything will be done by our citizens to make the few hours you spend with us profitable and pleasant. Excursions to this point; also to the birth place of Abraham Lincoln, with privilege to stop over at Muldraugh Hill Fort will be given by the C. O. & S. W. R. R. at special rates.

The trip will lay along the southern shore of the Ohio River, through the prettiest part of Jefferson County, passing the celebrated Ohio Valley Stock Farms on the right, and the chain of Bullitt Knobbs on the left, traversing the great natural gas belt of Kentucky and crossing historic Salt River at its mouth, at the very point where the pontoon bridges were anchored during the war and over which armies crossed with their ponderous ordnance and commissary trains. Leaving cars at West Point, you will be met by an escort of guides familiar with the scenes and incidents of the war, who will conduct you to and through the Fort, which is within easy walking distance, pointing out and explaining objects of interest, and giving an historical synopsis of the Fort and the part it played in the great civil drama of 1861-5.

Several distinguished soldier speakers are invited and expected to be present each day of the encampment and will address their old comrades, and many historical relics will be exhibited.

A Reception Committee of ladies will receive and make welcome your wives and daughters.

A good "old time" Kentucky dinner will be furnished to all desiring at the uniform price of twenty-five cents. Those wishing to remain over night will be accommodated. Lodging twenty-five cents.

If desired you can spend the night in West Point, visit the Fort early the following morning and return to Louisville in time for the day's program there. Accommodations may be reserved in advance by letter.

Round trip fare including admittance to the fort 85 cents. No charge for guide service. Excursionists holding tickets to Lincoln's Birthplace will be charged 25c admission to Fort Hill. No visitor to the G. A. R. encampment should return to their home without first seeing the best preserved earthworks in the south. Special program Friday, September 13th.

Trains will leave Union Depot, Seventh and River, and Fourteenth and Kentucky Sts., Louisville, hourly, from September 11th to 16th inclusive. Time, 35 minutes to Fort Hill. Tickets good on all trains. For schedule time see daily and Sunday papers.
